La-may Face Powder is now used by over a million American women

A specialist has at last perfected a pure face powder that is guaranteed harmless to the most delicate baby skin. It beautifies wonderfully, because it helps to clear and lighten the skin and protect the complexion from blemishes. And it really stays on better than any other face powder. Of course, everyone knows the famous La-may Powder (French, Poudre L'Amor). This is the powder that does not contain starch, rice powder or dangerous white lead to make it adhere. White lead is a deadly poison and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that ruins the complexion by causing enlarged pores, blackheads and rice powder irritations. Five thousand dollars reward will be given any chemist who finds that La-may contains any white lead or rice powder. All dealers carry the large 60c box, and many dealers also carry the generous 30c trial size. When you use this harmless powder and see how beautifully it improves your complexion you will understand why La-may so quickly became the most popular beauty powder sold in New York. We will also give you five thousand dollars if you can buy a better face powder anywhere at any price. Herbert Royston, 16 East 18th St., New York. Save this notice.

PRIVILEGES OF MINORITY ARE ASSAILED—LOWDEN

fought in the same battle line and injured to respect one another, more than they had in the past. We were fighting against the principle that the only consideration in the universe are material considerations. From the moment that you announced the proposition that force is the last argument, you take the position that moral force and spiritual force and all the finer faculties of life no longer exist. They cannot exist side by side with the principle that the material universe is the only thing worth while.

Rights of Minority.

"Today, throughout the length and breadth of this land, there is no power in the majority to deprive the humblest individual of his right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; to deprive him of his right of life or of liberty or of property. These principles are assailed today on every hand, and the principle is announced that a majority can not together and have it within its power to deprive a minority of all these sacred rights; eye to destroy the minority should that minority stand in its way.

"This is furnishing a despotism as deadly, as cruel, as any despotism of any throne. We are told that approximately one-tenth of the population of the United States is composed of unnaturalized aliens. With all these forces of lawlessness and of disorder staining our land under specious names, and with false arguments opposing the power of government and of law and order, it is time that we aroused ourselves.

"The question is no longer how many people we have within our borders, but what kind of people? It is not numbers alone that make a nation great; it is the character of the individual citizen. And who can doubt today that America would be greater and our future brighter if we could reduce our population by a few hundred thousand of these malcontents who come from other lands? It is not quantity, it is quality in a democracy which makes for greatness. And that is true of a city, and it is true of a town, and it is true of a rural region, anywhere.

Quality Not Quantity.

"So, my friends, a community that has but 3,000 people is a great honor to America and a great achievement of civilization if those 3,000 men and women and children are leading happy and useful lives, with hope before them, with devotion to their fellowmen and to their country, and with a desire to make America the permanent home of civilization and of the world. It is quality of citizenship that is wanted, and you can exercise a great influence toward this end.

"Let us add a new activity in the direction of teaching our people what the government means, of encouraging a genuine spirit of Americanism, of making them feel in their hearts that this is the best country under the shining sun. If the people of America can be taught to lay aside carping criticism, in which they have indulged too long, and say to themselves, 'this is the best country anywhere on the face of the globe,' it will become so, and these forces of lawlessness and disorder, these men bred under a tyrannical form of government, with their narrow, twisted view of America, would make no headway when they come to our shores to teach our people discontent.

"The average man has a responsibility which he never bore before. The future of the world is in his keeping. He, not kings, must decide what the morrow shall be. He can make it, as the men of America have made it for our own land, a day of joy and opportunity for all; or he can make it a hideous nightmare, as the Bolsheviks have made it in Russia, where men, women and children long for the return of kings."

Factors Beyond Statutes.

Gov. Lowden was introduced to the several hundred members of the land association and their guests in the banquet hall of the Hotel Chicago at 2 o'clock by Earl Palmer, president of the association and Palmer Lumber Company, a director of the association. At the outset of his address, Gov. Lowden declared that "the great forces which move society are not after all those forces provided by law. If the family were controlled only by the statutes, if its life were not above the requirements of the state, if its members were not held together by finer chains than those that government makes, the family would soon disintegrate and disappear. The great mass of mankind live without thought of the restrictions of legal requirements."

"They are moved," he added, "by impulses which do not have to recur to the statute books; and so a city like Memphis, if it were simply influenced by legal rules, if there were nothing broader and finer in the hearts and lives of its citizens than anything required by law, Memphis would not have achieved the triumph which made it famed throughout the land. So it is with the state, and so it is with the nation. It is the influence and impulses that come from the heart, without thought of legal or formal or governmental requirements, that make a people great that bind the people of the state to the people of another. They are the same moral and spiritual impulses which come from the hearts of the people of one state and the people of another state, and in order to stimulate that relationship it is necessary that the people of all the states should know each other better."

McClure Compliments Beneke.

The opening session of the convention was called to order at 10:30 o'clock Thursday morning by John W. McClure, of Memphis, president of the organization.

The annual report of the president then followed almost immediately and in the order named the reports of F. D. Beneke, secretary; C. E. Collins, field

The Name of the Maker

How to get full value

In past years, eighty per cent of the men who came to a clothing store called for a garment by price or by color. Many men knew how much they would pay; others knew what color they would take.

Now men call for a garment by the name of the maker. They are satisfied to compromise on color to get quality. They are willing to pay a little more to get full value for every dollar. They want to know what's back of the color, what the price really means in quality.

You don't judge an automobile by the color it is painted. You want to know who made it. Clothes must now be bought the same way. Don't part with your money until you know the name of the maker, until you are sure of genuine quality and real value.

secretary, and Sam D. Fuson, member-at-large.

"Not only have the eyes of the nation been turned upon this land of opportunity but we have had inquiries from abroad for information as a result of our publicity which has been found its way into the foreign fields," Mr. McClure declared in reviewing the work of the association for the past year. "The feature of our work for the past year has been in the publicity field. The reputation which we have established by our publicity has been the basis of our success in the past year. It is the highest quality of publicity which has originated in our office is most remarkable."

"The success and growth during the past year of the organization has been due in large measure," Mr. McClure said, "to the fact that our association is better known and understood elsewhere than it is among our own people in the United States. Many people here are still ignorant that this is a scheme of the lumbermen and owners of our land to secure their property. Nothing could be further from the truth. Very few of our active members have been farmers of the territory are beginning to wake up to the value of the propaganda the association is carrying on and are joining in larger number in the endeavor," Mr. McClure said. "They realize that 'the creation of greater demand for alluvial lands and the bringing in of new settlers will result in more rapid development of roads, drainage and schools, the building of better communities and larger markets for his products—in a word, will bring to him the advantages of development of his country which would come to his children or grandchildren. It is not alone the increase in value of lands which he should consider. That will come in proportion to the progress of the territory, as a whole. When every little acre of the alluvial empire is occupied and put to productive work the amount of wealth produced will be one of the greatest assets of the nation—it will be greater than the flow of any oil field or the products of any mining territory—it will be the wonder of the world and the inhabitants of this region will be the favored ones of the earth with all the good things of the earth at their disposal, because they will have the wealth to give in exchange for a place in the world of great demand throughout the world—food and textiles."

Delta Progress Marvelous.

"Marvelous progress toward the development of the alluvial region of the lower Mississippi valley has been achieved during the year now drawing to a close," declared Mr. Beneke, in his annual report as secretary. "With the year since the war restrictions were removed, good roads projects involving $100,000,000 have been started in Eastern Arkansas, Western Mississippi and Northern Louisiana. Drainage systems totaling many millions have been secured, leaving improvements costing hundreds of thousands have been planned; towns and communities have caught the spirit of progress as reflected in city betterments and delta land values have risen with bewildering rapidity."

"Alluvial soil, which but a few years ago had a negligible value because of its undeveloped state, has become a tremendous asset as development proceeds. The document of yesterday, which predicted $500 an acre for alluvial land, has become the rule of today. Shreveport mill operators, who a few years ago disposed of cut-over land at an average price of the land of 100 to 150 cents, are beginning to regard their lumber operations as merely incidental to the harvest they still reap from alluvial land when the timber is removed."

Mr. Beneke reported that nine active and 26 associate members have been added to the association, totaling 55 members, 21 associate and 44 active. One of the new members, he said, is Mrs. Helen H. Roseboom of Clarksville, Miss.

Mr. Collins declared in his report on the reaction of publicity for the "Alluvial Empire" that "we found that anything we write about the delta region will be published somewhere. It is an interesting region."

Urge Buying Of New Timber Tracts By U. S. Government

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—A formal program of public acquisition of forest lands by the federal government, states and municipalities, and protection and preservation of forest growth on all privately owned lands which may not be better used for agriculture or a commercial factor and its place taken by Western timber. This inevitably results in added freight charges, which the consumer must pay.

The report suggested that the federal government work primarily through state agencies.
